

Dr. Raymond Green (right) and Melvin Carlile, Sons of Utah Pioneers, set a brass memorial marker in cement, marking the grave of Tommy, the son of Black Hawk Chief Tabby. Theo Daybell had to saw the roots of the more than 120-year-old pine tree so one of the stones marking the grave, which was dislodged by the roots, could be set in proper place.

Sons of Utah Pioneers Mark Grave of Indian Chief's Son

The local Sons of the Utah Pioneers erected a brass memorial marker at the site of a grave in the Heber City cemetery in which the son of an Indian chief was buried about 120 years ago. The marker was set in place the Friday before Memorial Day.

The son of Chief Tabby, who in 1867 signed the peace treaty ending the Black Hawk Wars, is buried under the tallest pine tree, the northeastern tree of the group of pines in the center of the cemetery. The grave is marked at each end with a stone and it is horizontal to all the other graves.

The marker briefly tells the story of the burial. Dr. Raymond Green, member of the SUP and historian the unrest kept the settlers behind the fort walls.

Joseph Stacy Murdock (June 26, 1822 - February 14, 1899), appointed by LDS Church President Brigham Young as the spiritual leader of the Mormon settlers in the Provo River Valley (Heber Valley), rescued two Indian children at the mouth of Provo Canyon, a boy and a girl, from an Indian who was headed to Mexico to sell them into slavery. He brought them to his home (across the street from the North School in Heber) to his first wife, who had not been able to bear children during their seven years of marriage. They reared them as their own and, in fact, educated them better than any of the thirty-two Bishop Murdock sealed the agreement with a gift to Chief Tabby of 50 to 100 head of cattle. Not only was the treaty kept, the two became friends, and the settlers came out from behind the fort walls.

One day, not long afterward, Bishop Murdock looked up toward Daniel Canyon and saw a small band of Indians coming toward the settlement. As they neared, he recognized Chief Tabby and saw that he was leading a pony carrying the body of a boy.

Chief Tabby went to Bishop Murdock's home and told him the boy was his son, Tommy, killed in a hunting accident. He requested a Mormon funeral and Bishop Murdock conducted graveside services. The grave was next to a pine tree planted by one of Bishop Murdock's sons a few years earlier.

Then Chief Tabby said he would also like an Indian burial. According to Indian tradition, the pony would have been slain and buried with the boy. But the grave wasn't big enough, so they built a pyre out of cedar wood, slit the pony's throat, and burned its body on the pyre.

Although Christian dead are buried in an east-west direction, Tommy was laid in a north-south grave, according to Indian tradition.

committee. He said the activities will include education, business, politics, churches, music and arts and crafts. He said he hopes the advertising campaigns he plans will bring in thousands of visitors for most of the events. Because of the city's budget problems, he said he has asked those in charge of the events to make them self-supporting and said they will be allowed to keep any profits they earn.

The centennial year will start off on Jan. 4 with Statehood Day. Each year a community in the state is selected for a special program to celebrate Statehood Day. During its centennial year, Heber has been chosen as the community for the celebration. State dignitaries and local Sons and Daughters of the Utah Pioneers will sponsor a program in the Wasatch High School auditorium following a community dinner in the gymnasium.

February will be Come Home month, under the direction of the Art Council.

The city's birthday party will be held in the new City Hall, March 4, with tours of the building and a big birthday cake.

to provide groups to perform maypole dances. Mr. Jackson suggested that the city park be christened Centennial Park during the celebration. Booths, in the style of the Old English May Fair, featuring handcrafts of local artists, and roving entertainers will be featured.

June's highlight will be the second annual all-Indian powwow.

A July 22 Pioneer Promenade and maybe some mountain men. Then, in the center, have an open-pit barbecue, where we'll roast a whole beef, or two beefs and maybe 40 or 50 lambs. We want about 10,000 people there ... In the evening there'll be square dancing."

He said he didn't want to detract from the County Fair in August and Swiss Days in September. He said it would be better just to sup-

November and December. Instead, he said, "We want to emphasize that particular time, that everyone gets a Thanksgiving dinner and everyone gets something for Christmas. We want to take care of the less-fortunate — invite widows, strangers and the less-fortunate into our homes to participate really emphasize the family at time."

Police Report

Construction Tools Worth $4,000 Taken

Construction equipment worth about $4,000 was reported stolen from a trailer at Daniels Summit Estates during the night of May 26, according to Wasatch County Sheriff Edd Thacker. He said the padlock had been broken and assorted construction tools were taken, including chainsaws, a compressor and hand tools.

$50 was taken from the cash register at Village Treasurers in Heber Olde Towne sometime during the night of May 28, according to Heber City Police Sargeant Dan Henley. He said the suspects entered through an unlocked window.

In what may be a related incident the same evening, according to Sgt. Henley, vandals unplugged an ice cream machine at the Heber Creeper causing $300 worth of ice cream to melt.

A 14-year-old boy was referred to juvenile authorities in connection with the theft of assorted items worth about $95 from a school storage locker, Sgt. Henley reported.

A Huffy, 20-inch dirt bike worth about $75 was taken from Central School May 15. Sgt. Henley said it was royal blue and black and was one year old.

A 17-year-old Salt Lake City girl suffered head injuries when she tripped over a low barbed-wire fence while running near the Midway Hot Springs Sunday evening, according to Sheriff Thacker. The victim, Michele Fitts, was taken to Wasatch County Hospital where she was treated and released.

AD
ing your kite)
THE LINES!

mix. A wet kite string across a power line can conduct a deadly shock. Know the facts and other electrical accidents. Talk Frankly About Electrical Safety. Don't fly your kite between the lines. Office.

Lower the numbers and raise the odds.

Controlling your blood pressure can reduce your risk of heart disease.

American Heart Association
WE'RE FIGHTING FOR YOUR LIFE

Correction

Heber City notified the Chamber of Commerce in March, 1987 that the caboose in front of the future Heber City offices had to be moved by April 30, 1987 rather than 1988, as reported by The Wave last week, according to Mayor Gordon Mendenhall.

CLIP "N" COLLAR

488 East Highway 40
Heber City, Utah 84032
654-2549 or 654-3994

Pet Grooming By Shirley Bauer

If your dog
Isn't becoming to you,
He should be Coming to me.

The easy way to sell your house